Biographical Sketch

Lawrence Cusack was a trustee and chairman of the British Columbia Fruitlands Irrigation District, an administrative body created by the Water Rights Branch after it took over the operations of the British Columbia Fruitlands Irrigation & Power Company in 1946. The British Columbia Fruitlands Irrigation District was operated by a Board of Trustees that was established to legislate by-laws, govern utility tolls, taxes and all tolls as well as to create and regulate subdivisions. Subdivisions, budgets and other actions requiring review were submitted to the Comptroller of Water Rights of the Water Rights Branch for approval.

In the late 1960s, after the North Kamloops amalgamated with City of Kamloops, there was discussion surrounding the amalgamation the sewage systems of the irrigation district and the City of Kamloops. Organized by the Brocklehurst Community Association and Brocklehurst Community Hall Association, two referendums were held on the question of whether or not Brocklehurst should establish a separate sewer system or amalgamate the system with the City of Kamloops. Lawrence Cusack was a member of the Brocklehurst Community Association and a fact finding committee, which was tasked with investigating options for an independent sewer system for Brocklehurst. Both referendums failed to meet the 60 percent necessary to establish a separate sewer system, which resulted in sewer system operations being amalgamated with the City of Kamloops.

In 1973 when the City of Kamloops amalgamated with Dufferin, Brocklehurst, Westsyde, Valleyview and the surrounding areas, the British Columbia Fruitlands Irrigation District was phased out and its operations were absorbed by the City of Kamloops.

Custodial History

1988.52 was in the possession of Lawrence Cusack until it was donated to the Kamloops Museum & Archives in 1988.

Scope and Content

Series documents Lawrence Cusack's role as a trustee and chairman of the British Columbia Fruitlands Irrigation District and as a member of the Brocklehurst Community Association and the association's fact finding committee. Collection consists of records relating to the establishment of a sewer system in Brocklehurst and the administration of the British Columbia Fruitlands Irrigation District. It includes meeting minutes, consultant reports, correspondence, financial summaries and other material. The material is arranged into two series: one consisting of the material from the British Columbia Fruitlands Irrigation District and one consisting of material from the Brocklehurst Community Association.
